

'Patriots' Hold Hate Session

*It's Like Garbage
You Get in Mail*

BY JACK MABLEY

THE U.S. mails have been stunk up more than usual lately with hate mail from irrational groups in and around Chicago.

The unsolicited letters attack all minorities, and particularly Jews. The authors term themselves Christians and patriots.

They keep their garbage legal, so there's really little you can do when you receive this mail. It's like getting a dead fish via the post.

So last Friday night at 8 o'clock there was held in the Atlantic hotel in the Loop a Nationalist Meeting, sponsored by the Christian Patriots Crusade.

It seemed a fair opportunity to take a look at these Christians and Patriots.

Dizzy Lizzy Sets Standard of Hate

There were a total of 33 Christian Patriots, one reporter, and two Zionist spies in the room. The direction of the meeting was made clear by the presence of a female known as Dizzy Lizzy, Chicago's Grand Old Lady of Hate.

Dizzy Lizzy's hates include Albert Einstein, Mahatma Gandhi, Fiorello La Guardia, Eleanor Roosevelt, Clarence Darrow, Robert M. Hutchins, William Allen White, Charles Evans Hughes, Louis D. Brandeis, Harlan F. Stone, the Federal Council of Churches of Christ and the League of Women Voters.

"Dangerous radicals," she called them.

A COUPLE of her compatriots were sitting in the front of the room, waiting for the meeting to begin. "I wrote Senator Fulbright," gurgled one old lady to her neighbor. "Of course, I don't like Fulbright, but you have to write somebody."

"I told Fulbright to get that Jew Eisenhower out of the White House. He'll be going out anyway pretty soon, but we've GOT to impeach him before he does any more harm."

The meeting was called to order by one F. Allen Mann with the good news that for the next meeting he hoped to have as speaker Gen. Grant the third. He would prove that the Jews started the Civil War.

* * *

MR. MANN held forth for two hours, with occasional help from Dizzy Lizzy and some hollow-chested youths who would pop up spasmodically to berate Jews, Hitler, bankers, the U.N., Anne Frank, Eisenhower, Reds, and, I am happy to announce, Tony Weitzel and Jack Mabley.

The 33 Christian Patriots sat nodding their heads joyously.

Scene ~~Lacked~~ Only Egan, But Not Long

About all that was needed to make this ludicrous scene complete was Paul Egan. Well, to end the suspense, Paul Egan, the mayor of Aurora, was the featured speaker.

He sat and listened dazedly to this bilge for two hours. Then he got up and said, "I've heard things to-night I've never heard before."

Then Egan told the Christian Patriots things they'd never heard before.

But to his credit, he said nothing anti-Semitic. Egan doesn't hate Jews. He seems to hate everybody.

* * *

AFTER his final fuddling remarks, Egan made for the door to the accompaniment of waves of applause.

He reached the door, turned and grinned and waved to the crowd, and walked through the door. It was a closet.

He was led out by Mann, who conducted him to the right door.

CHRISTIAN PATRIOTS CRUSADE MEETING
FRIDAY, JANUARY 22, 1960
ATLANTIC HOTEL, 316 SOUTH CLARK STREET,
CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

On January 22, 1960, a confidential informant advised that on that date a meeting of the Christian Patriots Crusade was held in the banquet hall, Atlantic Hotel, 316 South Clark Street, Chicago, Illinois. Informant stated that the meeting was called to order at approximately 8:30 p.m. by F. Allen Mann, who chaired the meeting throughout the evening.

In his opening remarks, Mann stated that it was the intention of the Christian Patriots Crusade to hold a series of such meetings in the future, and that the meeting on January 22, 1960, was more or less a trial meeting. Mann stated that it was possible for their organization to secure "practically anybody that we want" to appear before their group. He explained that they have had any number of prominent speakers offered to them for this purpose.

In his opening remarks, source stated, Mann made reference to a proposed meeting for April, 1960, to be held at the LaSalle Hotel, Chicago, Illinois. Further details concerning this meeting were not made available by Mann at this meeting.

Informant stated that the early part of the evening was devoted to a plan proposed by Mann for a series of mailings of "Nationalist type" literature. Mann stated that by beginning with a nucleus of about one hundred people who would voluntarily contribute the sum of $2.24 each week for the purchase of stamps, envelopes, and literature it would be possible ultimately to reach thousands of persons with their message. In this regard,

RE: CHRISTIAN PATRIOTS CRUSADE MEETING

Mann stated he felt that merely meeting together served no particular purpose, and that it was evident that they could reach untold numbers of people by commencing an effort against the "Jewish press". Mann stated that should his project be adopted in the end close to a half million people would be reached with this literature.

Following Mann's detailed explanation of his plan, those present at this meeting undertook to prepare envelopes and literature for mailing at that time.

The source stated that the next portion of the meeting was concerned chiefly with a tirade on the part of Mann against the Jews. Mann offered extensive comments concerning the Talmud and those who follow the teachings of the Talmud.

The principal topic of discussion as offered by Mann during the course of this meeting was, according to the source, an analysis of the recent swastika painting incidents. In this regard, Mann was highly critical of the treatment afforded such incidents by the press. He charged that the press was attempting, by their articles, to tie up all Nationalist organizations with Nazism. Mann stated that the newspapers are "breathing the fire of the old atrocity stories that they've been putting out for years and years". In this regard, Mann proceeded to debunk the theory that millions of Jews suffered death at the hands of Adolph Hitler and his followers. He stated that according to available sources there were far more Jews in the world at the end of World War II than before the war began.

Source stated that Mann made reference to Lincoln Rockwell and his American Nazi Party. He denied any affiliation with this group and criticized its very existence. Source stated that Mann took the stand that the Jews are utilizing Rockwell to achieve their own goals.

In connection with recent swastika paintings, Mann made reference to three specific incidents that had received extensive publicity in the Chicago area. The first of these incidents concerned a Jewish synagogue located on Paulina Street in Chicago, Illinois. The second concerned the painting of one or two swastikas "inside a locked synagogue", while the third incident referred to by Mann concerned the overturning of tombstones in a Jewish cemetery in the Chicago area. In defining these happenings, Mann pointed out, concerning the window breaking incident, that those who were determined as responsible for the incident were four fourteen to fifteen year old boys, two of whom later were determined to be Jewish.

RE: CHRISTIAN PATRIOTS CRUSADE MEETING

At this point, source stated Mann deviated from his analysis of these three happenings to explain that it was his belief that these incidents were caused by people who comprise three different classifications. The first of these Mann described as those persons who do such things only for the thrill and are "just pranksters". Mann stated there have been many cases of such persons. The second group Mann classified as "well-meaning people" who are painting the swastikas on the buildings. In connection with this second group, Mann stated that he could conceive of no better symbol to affix to a building to show one's displeasure with the Jews than a swastika. In this regard, he stated that to this group the swastika does not represent Nazism but merely shows a symbol of their defiance against Jewish tyranny. Mann stated this second group is comprised of people who are desperately seeking a way to show their displeasure with the Jews. The third group of people described by Mann are the Jews themselves. Concerning these people, Mann offered the opinion that this group is possibly the smallest of the three.

In his talk, Mann attempted, source stated, to show a similarity between the recent incidents and the synagogue bombings that have occurred in the past. He cited as an example a bombing of a Jewish synagogue in Charlotte, North Carolina, in November, 1957, wherein Mann stated it was claimed that total destruction of the temple occurred and more than $10,000 damage was done. In disclaiming the incident, Mann alleged that the section of the temple bombed was at that time under consideration for remodeling, and furthermore that the temple was fully insured. In addition, Mann pointed out that the temple was in receipt of thousands of dollars in contributions following the bombing incident.

Source stated that Mann in continuing his speech made reference to the recent arrest in New York City of three boys who, according to Mann, were charged with treason for "clicking their heels". Mann identified the judge in question as one Judge Solomon (phonetic) and condemned the entire incident. Source stated that Mann next brought up the subject of a current campaign being conducted by the CBS Television Network which he stated is described by the network as a documentary on the Nationalist movement.

Mann stated that although this is presented as an impartial approach such could not be true since the CBS Network is run by Jews. Mann spoke as to how he had been called on by representatives of CBS who were attempting to solicit his cooperation. He stated that he went along with them merely to determine the extent of their activities. Source stated that according to Mann he was offered as high as $950 to appear on their program. Mann stated that in explanation the program was not to be an impartial documentary, and he indicated that such would be taped and completely edited prior to the actual broadcast.

Mann characterized the swastika painting incident as a prelude to an overall plan to smear and discredit the Nationalist movement, and further, source stated, that it was an attempt to create a climate of public opinion which is favorable to Congressional action in regard to civil rights legislation.

Source stated that the bulk of Mann's talk during the evening consisted of an attempt on his part to defame the Jewish race as a whole and specifically Jews in particular.

Source stated that the guest speaker for the evening was Mayor Paul Egan of Aurora, Illinois, who spoke briefly concerning his status as Mayor of that community, and who offered the proposition that something was seriously wrong in Aurora, in Chicago, the State of Illinois, the United States, and in the world. No particular solution to the problem was offered by Mayor Egan other than to say that it was his belief that the crux of the situation is "should all of the people rule or are the phony crook rulers going to rule."

Following Mayor Egan's talk, Mann announced that it was the intention of the organization to engage very important speakers, and that further announcements concerning such meetings would be forthcoming.

On 12/31/59, [redacted]
[redacted], received through the mail some literature from the Christian Patriots Crusade, P.O. Box 147, Hinsdale, Illinois. This literature consisted of a mimeographed letter dated 12/30/59 which stated in part as follows:

"We want to thank you for so patiently waiting to hear from us. It has, we know, been quite a long while since our most recent communication.

"It is our intention to resume regular publication of The Revere as soon as circumstances permit us to do so. One consideration will be the response of our subscribers to this letter.

"For the present, we are enclosing a copy of our newest leaflet 'Exposing the Enemy'...."

This mimeographed letter was signed "In His Service F. Allen Mann."

Below the name of F. Allen Mann was a "special offer" that was being made in connection with the pamphlet "Exposing the Enemy." This offer stated that with each order of "Exposing the Enemy" of $2 or more a special folio collection of political and religious essays would be sent.

[redacted] tore off the order blank at the bottom of this letter inasmuch as he intended to order $2 worth of this literature.

Included with the mimeographed letter was one copy of the leaflet "Exposing the Enemy" which was anti-Jewish in nature and indicated that it was published by the Christian Patriots Crusade, P.O. Box 147, Hinsdale, Illinois.

Marking the rebirth of F Allen Mann's activities in the 'patriotic cause', the Nationalist meeting held in the Atlantic Hotel on a particularly miserable evening, was singularly uneventful. Everything went wrong for Allen's latest brainchild starting with the weather which kept the attendance slack. After repeated postponements, the meeting was finally started around 8:40 with an audience that never grew over 50.

The billing for the event had boosted both Mayor Egan, Mann and the [redacted] [redacted] however never showed and Egan, as his speech subsequently proved, was as out of place as matzo balls at Hitler's dinner table.

The audience was the usual assortment of cranks, blow-hards, Constitutional conversatives, & religious zealots, spiced with a sprinkling of fire-brands and fanatics. Gathered in small knots of 3 and 4 which interchanged as the dialogue got stale, they poured out their hearts in tales of plight and persecution. [redacted], an elderly lady with grayish-red hair kept bouncing from one group to another repeating her charges against (a) the Rossenvelt New Deal (b.) courageous [redacted] and (c.) the hospital insurance racket. Bending the ear of her neighbor she praised Thunderbolt as one of the best publications available and crowed over the last issue which "contained things I never dreamed of about the F.B.I. - rather, the Jew B.I." She has bought 20 copies of the last issue for re-distribution in the Chicago area and also suggested that her neighbor buy the publication as well. [redacted]

At the front of the room was the speakers table which was loaded down with stacks of leaflets, books, pamphlets and envelopes. Behind the table sat two of the three new young figures that Mann has added to the retinue. One, [redacted] was a tall, ungainly teenager with a long, thin face and a profile amazingly like Robert Mitchem. He took no official part in the program although he was known to several people there and chatted informally after the meeting adjourned. The second youth, around 17, was of medium build, with dark hair and an incredibly pimpled face. He wore dark, plastic-rimmed glasses. The third youth, and the most rabid of the three, served as a vigilant doorman. Probably 15, he was slight of build, short, with a chalk-white complexion and an impeccably dour expression on his face. He lives near Chicago in a trailer park with his parents and like all good zealots he passes out literature in the camp ("from which I have received amazing replies.")

* location of the park is uncertain but it is close to the "Green Frog Trailer Court" since he also distributes literature there.

On his suit pocket dangled a plastic "Ritterkreuz" which I remarked upon. "Oh, yes" he replied, "I have a real one at home - it even has a swastika on it."

After the meeting was over, I was looking through some old copies of Life I had bought at a bookstore that day. Coming across a picture of Hitler framed by the German eagle and swastika, our young zealot nearly leaped across the table to look, "ohing and ahing" at the pictures like a Hitler-Jugend at a Nurenberg Parteitag, "I have a youth group myself," he volunteered, "and we do a lot of good work."

[redacted] and [redacted] arrived together, greeting Mann cordially. [redacted] entered the room and took a seat but [redacted] lugging a bulging briefcase, disappeared and was not at the meeting. Someone also said Andrew McAllister was present, but I never saw him. Otherwise the audience was principally women, most well advanced in years and more interested in peddling their own sob stories than in hearing any speakers. Only Elizabeth Dillings commanded any attention, busfing into the room with a bevy of lesser bigots clinging to her. A single Negro woman sat isolated from the rest of the group, very old and very pathetic - a social pariah. As the meeting died she left the room just as Joe Beauharnais entered and Joe's lip snarled in contempt as she brushed against him. Joe, by the way, only stayed a few minutes, talking with whoever would listen and not finding his deserved attention he left promptly.

Opening the meeting, Mann got right down to the main point of business - the sales pitch. This was, he said, to be the beginning of a series of meeting to be held in the Chicago area. Later at the LaSalle Hotel such patriotic giants as Adm.

and [redacted] would address the group.

b7C

But meeting in themselves were nothing, they could even be dangerous to the patriot who left them feeling over confident and satisfied. Passing resolutions against the Un, the Income Tax, etc. was a waste of time, absorbing and wasting the patriots time and (most important) his money. The meetings had become mere exercises in futility. Furthermore there was the usually deceitful traps employed by the Jews to snare the unwary patriots like Everingham's party or Kent Courtney's movement. Everingham, Mann sneered "can't even be seen for that cluster of Jews around him," and Courtney (far, far worse) "has a relative working in the ADL offices in New Orleans."

Defeat lay in store, Mann said, painting a gloomy picture of the U. S. today. The press and all forms of public communication are in the hands of the enemy, they control the big money; they can set up organizations at will. The patriot, voiceless, defenseless, bewildered, harrassed and bullied by police and federal agents, driven from his scource of livilihood, lay crushed and defeated. Only Mann's new operation could save the country from final despair, could lift the patriot to the heights of victory and what was the new plan?

"You see on the table before you," he begin," several stacks of literature. Over there is a supply of envelopes supplied to us by American Mercury indirectly through Woman's Voice. What I want is for each one of you to come up, pick up 30 of each leaflet and 30 envelopes and mail them to thirty friends. These would likewise be prodded to distribute literature to thirty of their friends thus snowballing the effort. Quoting an impressive set of statistics Mann voiced his assurance that if every patriot spend $4.25 and thirty minutes of his time each week the distribution of leaflets could reach 900,000 within a month.

Quickly explaining each leaflet (and quite artfully I might add) Mann then called a brief recess while the audience stepped forward to answer the call. About 15 people took leaflets, while the others buttonholed each other to begin all over again the sad tales of personal woe. [redacted] well known to most of the crowd, bought a copy of "Rudolph Hess-Prisoner of Peace/" one of four books offered for sale. Otherwise the stacks of literature were hardly dented and Mann (afterwards) expressed bitter disappointment over the sales.

With some difficulty Mann managed to regenerate the meeting with the announcement that he was now going to explain the swastika campaign - "and the bigger plot behind it."

At almost the same time, two men entered the room and took seats in the back as a whisper rippled through the crowd, "Jews". Dillings turned her head distainfully away and screwed up her face. For Mann, on the speakers rostrum, it acted as a mechanical goad and his speech, moderately boring till then, turned distinctly venomous in tone and he frequently sputtered in obvious rage, searching for words more insulting and degrading than he had used in the sentence before.

To compound the agony there were two reporters also present.

Mann's analysis of the swastika campaign is amazingly like [redacted] --it is a plot to discredit the anti-Semite (sic) by painting him with the tar brush of Nazism. Since this was the tactical aim of the smear Mann devoted his opening sentences to demolishing Hitler. He had failed in the verdict of history, Mann said, failing his people and his army - 2 an army that couldn't even knock over Russia." "We have no need for a Hitler here" he snarled. "There are plenty of good, American patriots to look up too without importing a European failure."

Blunting the thrust of the enemy's attack, Mann now established the pattern of the swastikas. Essentially there were three groups, (1) those who were in sympathy with the patriotic movement but imbued with a bad sense of timing (2) genuine crack-pots and juvenile teens and (3) the Jews themselves. In this connection was the strange case of Lincoln Rockwell. "These posturing Fuehrer" as Mann referred to him, "with his three storm troopers openly tells the press and tv exactly what the Jews want him to say".

It is through the amenable Rockwell that the Jews hope to tie in the American bigots with the more international Nazis. Thus they have "set up, finance and control Rockwell," all pleasant news to Mrs. Dillings who had lead the floor fight against him at the July, 1960 meeting in Chicago.

Turning to the newspaper clippings of the swastika events (and Mann used them brilliantly and with great effect) he pointed out the glaring discrepancy between the bold headlines on the Nazi scare and the subsequent "truth" about the events. Thus the breaking of windows in a Chicago synagogue was reported in a banner line as a "Nazi-type action" while police, when they caught the guilty culprits and found two of them Jewish boys, had the event hushed up and a skimpy item on it was buried in the inside of the paper.

And for the paint of a yellow swastika on the inside of another Chicago synagogue, "what endurance would it take to stand the stanch of the place long enough to hide out a paint the swastika."

Coupled with the press campaign of denouncing the swastika smearers was the equally suspect (and Jewish inspired) lauding of Jewish 'heroes' like Anne Frank. This was the vilest part of Mann's speech, set in a burlesque atmosphere of scorn and derision. Holding aloft a full page add which featured the artists conception of Anne Frank's face Mann's voice broke with mock pity as he exclaimed, "Look at that face, it's it just - just too pitiful. What Hollywood director could do as good?" And as for the supposedly "Jewish war dead" he could not understand how it was there there were "more Jews alive at the end of the war than at its start."

"That's cause your just a boy" quipped Dillings from the audience.

The fact that one reporter had phoned the Chicago offices of the ADL particularly upset Mann. Imagine, he said, someone writing a story on crime "phoneing the arch-criminals themselves for the details".

Mann had now been talking for over an hour without touching on the giant plot he had mentioned at the beginning. Throughout his address the CBS filming of several 'patriots' for an 'impartial show' had been mentioned and it gradually dawned that this was the plot, intertwined with Mann's personal tragedy. Behind the CBS film stands Bill Peters "the article appearing in Coronet attacking 'hate-mongers' was written by this man - this man who now promises us impartiality."

"This Jew-kissing Peters..." Mann ranted, "...this cheap, Jewish hack writer...is behind the smear campaign." Worse yet, several patriots had already been suckered in; "a national director of a States Right party has already granted one interview" and "Rockwell will say anything they want him to." Only Mann saw through the plot and refused to grant an interview. Enraged the CBS camera crews then caused Mann to be fired by barging into his employer's shop with cameras, etc.

At his point two or three people in the audience rose and asked to hear Mayor Egan as "time was getting late". With a curt introduction Mann reluctantly gave the show over to the long-suffering Mayor.

A heavy-set man with a large-blockish face and thick jowls, the Mayor spoke in the booming pitch of an election campaigners drawling out his words and chopping up his sentences until the silence was unbearable. "My Friends, I am no stranger to persecution," he began and promptly lost the ball. Rambling aimlessly through a story of his youth in the Canadian Air Force he finally pulled back into the present with an attack on "this evil, this thing...For folks, theres.....something wrong..... wrong in Auroria, wrong in Chicago, wrong in the country and WRONG in....the world." Just what this evil was remains uncertain but he soured the audience when he said that "it couldn't be blamed on one race of people." And his political popularity dropped to rockbottom when he made the damning admission, "why, I have several good Jewish friends."

At other times the good Mayor sounded like a party hack with his fumeing denunciations of "big monopolies that crush the little fellow."

He drew applause only once when he alluded to the sorry condition existing in the Chicago police force and added, "It looks like you need to do some house-cleaning here too." Otherwise it was a new and not altogether experience for the Mayor. "I've heard things here tonight, I never heard before." To the audience however it was all old-hat.

As the meeting died, Dillings and a few others chatted briefly with Mann at the literature table. Dillings was sure there were 3 ADL agents covering the meeting besides the newspaper reporters. Someone said the crippled girl attending the meeting was a "Jew spy" also, but Mann couldn't believe it. Dillings finally grapped a man by the arm and departed. Since she lives nears some Jewish neighbors she wanted someone with her while she parked her car in the garage. Somehow Elizabeth looked like she could protect the escort better than he could her.

Mann and I eluded the others and returned to the Atlantic for a short beer. Mann once again brought up the question as to why I used the name, Repass and I once again repeated a torturously labored explanation which, if it didn't entirely satisfy him left him thoroughly confused.

Seated at a table he greedily poured out the nights receipts lamenting that it wouldn't even cover his printers bill. Nor had Mann's appeal to distribute leaflets eariler in the evening been prompted purely from patriotic reasons. This was surplus stock Mann was peddling, stock he had to get "rid of somewhy" and this was as good a gimmik as any other."

Touching on [] and there seems no love lost between them, he said that [] has lost his head completely over the CBS 'thing' and had at first consented to let them film a whole convention even promising to "make it a wild one for their benifit. Only the sage council of Mann and Stoner had talked him out of that. To return vengeance on CBS Mann then suggested sending out fake letters advert. the NSRP rally and letting the CBS film crews come all the way to Louisville before telling them there was no convention.

As to his own future, Mann was uncertain. His father does not like the idea of Mann re-entering the 'patriotic arena. Nor does Mann want publicity, espically concerning the meeting at which he said, admittedly, some rash tings. "Those two Jews in the back was what got me," he said, "Everything I was saying was directed to them." Still nervous he let me out at the WMCA and drove home to anxiously awaiting the morning newspapers.
